It seems clear from the start that he's a sophist, and the narrator is too dull to realize as. I read this ditty immediately after finishing a book of obscure, previously unknown short stories from a young Henry James.

There she meets George Gravener, a man with a real intellect and a future in politics. Miss Anvoy is inclined to award the trust to Mr Saltram, but she first wishes to check if there is anything worse about his behaviour about which she has not been told. However, thanks to your pointer, I see that they are a treasure trove. What does she do? The Coxon Fund was written long .
