My hunch is that a mathesis of quality might well entail a reappraisal of analogy along the lines I set-out. Is something not lost if such differences are readily glossed over? For if unfulfilled need is the impetus and motor of dialectical-material movement, so then is—on the ground of the same absent content—the totality of the non-existing All its cohering goal.

Ineffect, difference[...]recovers an effectively real concept only to the extent Essential being is not Been-ness; on the contrary: Although the details of why this is the case do not concern me here, suffice it to say that Bloch thought speculatively during an historical juncture in which speculative modes of thought were considered intellectually obsolete both East and West of the dividing ideological-political line.
