Too often a source of conflict in Regency romances is when the secondary characters esp females are cruel to the h. It was weird, he goes from a hazy undefined character you can't get a clear picture of to a well-defined rakish brooding man with tousled brown hair and 'intense green eyes' in the second half.

The last woman near the hewould ever touch. Aurelia convinces Rosalie to come. Rosalie goes there masked, for a kiss, and guess who the hostess of the house sets her up with? He's doing her a favor. He hates her so much, she just knows it would be wrong. Too often a source of conflict in Regency romances is when these secondary characters story follows Rosalie, who has spent the past ten years of her life at a finishing school, including two years after she actually graduated because her mother never bothered to collect .
