The Services must also restrict their recruiting to a specific population. An effective message strategy is the key ingredient in successful advertising. Some applicants who do not meet all enlistment standards may be eligible for waivers of some standards, and recruiters must be knowledgeable in procedures for handling those waiver requests. Inresponsetorecruitingdifficultiesinrecentyears, theServicesarecur Data from the DoD on the effectiveness of individual or joint Service advertising campaigns was not available. Three possible approaches are centralization, outsourcing, and record keeping to support analysis of the process. Other than a continuous period from tothere is an irregular pattern to joint Services advertising, with frequent gaps showing little or no investment in this advertising approach. The decline in the proportion of the youth population that has a family member message emphasizes that there will always be a need for people who can live up to these values. Some of these differences may be minor administrative issues.
